Organic, Regenerative and Outcomes-Based Agriculture in the Context of Nature Positive and Nature Credits

European sustainability policies and international initiatives are increasingly driving the transition from compliance-based agricultural models toward outcomes-based approaches, aligned with the emerging concepts of Nature Positive and Nature Credits.

Within this framework, organic agriculture provides a robust regulatory and technical foundation, while regenerative agriculture offers an evolutionary pathway focused on ecosystem regeneration, biodiversity, soil health, and climate resilience. Their integration creates new opportunities to strengthen sustainability standards, certification systems, and the economic valorization of positive actions for nature.

The seminar will explore how organic and regenerative production models can evolve from a practice-based to an outcomes-based approach, examining measurable environmental indicators such as biodiversity, ecosystem services, soil quality, and climate resilience. It will also discuss how existing standards, certification tools, and new European initiatives on Nature Credits can be integrated, highlighting opportunities, challenges, and future perspectives for farmers, value chains, certification bodies, and institutional stakeholders.
